Publication Guidelines

College of Veterinary Medicine

The publication of articles relating to the many aspects of veterinary medicine is an activity supported strongly by the College. This is an activity that requires college resources, including faculty and staff time, secretarial time, and college materials, in general. Faculty and staff are encouraged to write general, academic, or scientific articles, but must always consider the quality of such products since the reputation of the College and its faculty and staff depends to a large measure on this form of communication. The College will only provide financial support to totally or partially offset the page charges for a publication when the article has been processed through the internal official manuscript review process as managed by the Office of Research and Graduate Studies.
